Concatenation Impromptu.

Outside the night was dark and chill, while within the little 12 by 20 lumber office, close beside the rushing waters of the Arkansas, sat the local manager, conning thoughts of the past; thoughts of busy days and lonesome nights spent in the piny woods of the far South; lonesome nights, with only the soughing of the wind through the swaying branches of a few lonesome pines, that had escaped the ruthless saw, for company. Mingled with these thoughts that brought visions of happier days ran a string of figures and items incident to the business of the day just closed. Fitful gusts of wind drove drizzling rain and snow against the window panes, while heavy clouds overhung the distant peaks of the Greenhorn Range. On the floor baside the manager but the last issue of the Rulletin conbeside the manager lay the last issue of the Bulletin, containing the report of the annual meeting of the faithful followers of the Great Black Prince, and accounts of numerous joyous times "on the roof." Lonesomeness could not be more lonesome, regrets more regretful, or longings deeper than those which came to the lonely kitten (1050) as he sat there in his den in the far-off village among the Rockies.

But, hark! What was that? A scratching at the door, a meow. What luck! A visitor from the realms of the Great Prince. "Come in, and thrice welcome, Tabby. Here dry your coat and stretch your aching limbs. What! In trouble? Must be going? Not if I know it. No Hoo-

In troubler Must be going; Not it I know it. No Hoo-Hoo shall pass this door on a night like this."

Louder howled the wind, and colder grew the night.

Dreams of vast holdings of virgin timber and countless singing saws soothed the tired manager into peaceful sleep. Morning came. The busy world was alive again; but what strange voice was that? Not only one meow, but five, pitched from lofty soprano to feline contralto. No end of luck! The manager rubbed his eyes. Yes, in truth, four kittens and the faithful Tabby made complete the feline quintet. First came "William Eddy" because of feline quintet. First came "William Eddy" because of his open, honest countenance. Next shall hereafter bear the illustrious name of "Boling Arthur" because of his lofty, noble bearing, and unmistakable "my-heart-and-purse-are-always-open" air. One strictly clear, yellow as long leaf, was christened "Yellow Pine;" the last, with colors galore, was dubbed "Straight Grain."
